In an email to MSNBC, Trump wrote, "If China is sincere in wanting to make a deal, they should act soon, they should start by finishing their devaluation of their currency, making it a competitive currency which is good for our Country!"... The president's suggestion came after China devalued its currency, the yuan, about 6% to its lowest level in more than a year last week, amid trade disputes with the United States...

What's New in the CrossTec VueAlert?

CrossTec VueAlert is a PC notification application that allows its users to send custom messages or notifications to multiple PCs. The software is easy to use and configure, it just needs to be installed on one PC and then it will enable its user to manage other PCs over the network. Once the server settings are configured, it will be able to detect all the PCs connected to the local area network and it will list them in its IP viewer. The preferred machines can be selected and then used for sending the required messages. You can choose to set up custom messages and send them with different statuses: "news", "message", "technical", "alert" or "critical". Each message can be sent with a different status and the utility provides an accessible slider that allows people to easily toggle between the available settings. The color of the message footer will then be automatically changes, in accordance with the importance of the selected message status, for example green for neutral or red for critical. One great feature offered by CrossTec VueAlert is its scheduling tool, which allows users to define the time intervals when the messages will be sent out to the remote machines. CrossTec VueAlert is compatible with Windows 98, 2000, ME, XP, Vista, 7 and 8. I used to use this, but it seems to be gone from their site. It could be that this is one of those "one of ours" type thing. JPC 08-17-2012 10:12 AM Re: [Microsoft] Good network management tools CrossTec VueAlert is one of them.
