Trigeminal neuralgia (TN) is a neuropathic pain involving the trigeminal nerve in which there is a sharp pain in the territory of one or more branches of the trigeminal nerve. Its aetiology is not fully understood. There is no definitive treatment for TN. The first treatment for TN is medication that is used in most cases, and when the pain is not controlled by medication, neurosurgical therapy is available as a second-line treatment. The purpose of this study was to identify the demographics, aetiology and treatment for TN. We performed a cross-sectional, descriptive and observational study. The sample consisted of patients diagnosed with TN by a neurologist and matched with a volunteer control group. Information was obtained from patients from December 2011 to December 2014, and from the control group between July 2010 and November 2015. We included 193 patients diagnosed with TN and a control group of 193 volunteers with no history of TN and no head or neck trauma. Demographic data, risk factors and associated diseases, diagnosis, treatment for TN, and pain and disability levels were collected. The data were entered into the Statistical Package for Social Sciences (SPSS) v. 19.0 software program. The average age of the patients was $56.93 \pm$
