I would like to do it in a generic way. This is what I have done. Type tbText = Type.GetType(string.Format("{0}_Text", TextBoxName)); PropertyInfo propInfo = tbText.GetProperty("Text"); propInfo.SetValue(myTextBox, "new text", null); When I execute this code, it says that the argument of the method is incorrect. What can I do to make it work? A: Thanks for the help. I got the solution as, Type tbText = Type.GetType(string.Format("{0}_Text", TextBoxName)); PropertyInfo propInfo = tbText.GetProperty("Text"); Type classText = propInfo.PropertyType; object objText = Activator.CreateInstance(classText); propInfo.SetValue(myTextBox, objText, null); Of course we know this, we are not talking about a new drug approved by the FDA or any FDA requirement. But we know that the Drug Enforcement Agency is the world's largest law enforcement agency, so what we need to know is how we are going to use that position to mitigate potential drug abuse, while also preserving the efficacy of medications that are abused. This is done by cutting off access to the legal supply. This is done in the United States on a national level and also in Canada through a joint police initiative with the US in which the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and US DEA teams work together to ca3bfb1094
