To compare Australian treatment outcomes following radiotherapy (RT) for patients with stage I endometrial carcinoma. The role of RT in the management of stage I endometrial carcinoma and the potential for improving outcomes is unclear. Patients with stage I endometrial carcinoma treated with RT in New South Wales between 1 January 2001 and 31 December 2003 were identified from the New South Wales Central Cancer Registry (NSWCCR). Comparisons between groups of patients treated with and without RT were made using univariate and multivariate analyses. Of 886 women with stage I endometrial carcinoma treated with surgery and/or RT, 470 (54.3%) received RT (RT group) and 416 (45.7%) did not receive RT (No RT group). RT was the sole treatment in 97.5% of patients. Of those in the RT group, 69.2% received external beam irradiation (EBRT). Of all women treated with EBRT, 68.3% received EBRT in conjunction with brachytherapy, and 14.4% received brachytherapy alone. Median radiation dose delivered to the pelvis was 45 Gy.
