Accurate knowledge about alcohol problems among women involved in the justice system is important because of the potential effects of alcohol use and misuse on the course and outcome of their cases. This study describes the prevalence of alcohol use and misuse among 125 women detained in a county jail, and compares them to their sober counterparts. Using the MAST (Michigan Alcohol Screening Test), responses to questions about alcoholic beverages and about consequences of drinking while on bail were compared between sober women (n = 104) and women who had consumed alcohol within the previous week (n = 21). Results indicate that women involved in the justice system are heavy drinkers and use alcohol in a pattern similar to that of the general population.Wednesday, August 5, 2016 Double Trouble - Extraordinary Twins Not too many people know that I collect ornaments.
