Effect of cadmium on the chemical and structural properties of liposomes. The physicochemical properties of liposomes made of egg phosphatidylcholine were studied as a function of liposomal content of CdCl<sub>2</sub>. At high liposomal contents, the ordered structure of the bilayer of phosphatidylcholine was lost, probably due to the entrapment of cadmium in phosphatidylcholine molecules. Liposomes were formed by the application of a low mechanical stress to the mixture of suspended liposomes and cadmium. The results obtained show the following: 1) incorporation of cadmium was dependent on the Cd/P greater than 0 ratio used; 2) for Cd/P greater than 0 ratios close to unity, cadmium was completely entrapped in the lipid bilayer, according to what was observed from the electron micrographs, as liposomes became larger and more heterogeneous in shape and size; 3) for Cd/P greater than 0 ratios equal to or higher than unity, part of the incorporated cadmium was located in the interlamellar space, as also indicated by electron micrographs; 4) The turbidity behavior of the liposomes was dependent on the Cd/P greater than 0 ratio. Jabez D. Andrews Jabez Daniel Andrews (May 21, 1764 - January 26, 1838) was a pioneer and the founder of the city of Kent, Washington County, Ohio, in 1804. He laid out the town on land provided by the government, and was a founder of the Kent Masonic lodge. Andrews was also a noted Mason and held this high position in the Grand Lodge of Ohio for some years. Originally from Pennsylvania, Andrews built a new city at the confluence of the East Fork of the Grand River and Grand River, now a suburb of Mansfield, Ohio. He built the first stone mill to be used in present-day Kent and part of nearby Kent, Ohio, and was granted a patent in 1813 for the invention of the Andrews side-pierced dam. Early life and education Andrews was born in the town of Biglerville, Pennsylvania, near present-day John
