"I've seen the future and it is a female version of me," Dr. Bruce Carver, founder of Women's Wear Daily, told me in a recent interview. Carver, whose business is known as "The Fashion News Service," has been predicting trends for more than a decade. People love this prediction from the World's Foremost Fashion Expert™: "Women are going to wear white maternity smocks in the winter and black maternity smocks in the summer." Carver is the second-best-known fashion forecaster, after Zeta Jones, according to a Zite News survey of 1,000 people. Carver has predicted that "men will go back to wearing gloves" as well as that "bridal wear will be more casual" and "couture will be democratized." But Carver's success isn't simply a function of being right about new products, or an intuitive sense of fashion. There is a method behind the madness. Carver has created a system called Rule Breaking Analysis that he uses to predict trends. According to Carver, the secret of his success is that he employs a system of data-driven journalism, asking the right questions to get to the truth. So if women are going to wear smocks in the winter and smocks in the summer, the question is: What should these smocks be made of? This is where Carver's predictive power comes in. He can tell designers what their customer wants, based on the way they behave. How else, he asks, can the leader of a room full of fashionistas select a dress without a mirror? For this talk I visit Carver at his studio in Lower Manhattan, where his team of roving "robot" reporters listen in on hundreds of conversations around the world. But it is really d0c515b9f4

The purpose of this article is to show that the Morrighans are not ancient or man-made but are real.
