Easy to learn, Photoshop is suited for beginners who are comfortable using a mouse and who want to do many image retouching and graphic design tasks. Because it's sold as a subscription-based program, Photoshop is expensive but well worth the cost. Holding Photoshop 2 If you want to get one of the latest Photoshop versions, make sure you choose the Version 2.0 version. Version 1.0 was a bit clunky, but Photoshop 3.0 and later versions were much better. Version 2.0 was a big improvement. If you don't have Photoshop 2.0 or later, you're likely to run into problems. Artists who've learned Photoshop from version 1 can use version 2 in any other edition of Adobe Photoshop, not just the Standard version. Program Requirements You need a computer that's equipped with a laser printer or an inkjet printer that you can print photos and other graphics on. Photoshop, like many programs these days, is the size of a book, so it's not real portable. But Photoshop does have several versions available in CD, DVD, or floppy disk form. Running on Windows computers, Photoshop operates in a window on the screen. When you have four or more monitors, you may want to run multiple Photoshop windows so you can view two or more pages at the same time. Other graphic editing programs, such as Paint Shop Pro, take up valuable desktop space, so having several working windows is more efficient. The graphics need to be raster images because Photoshop can't do other kinds of graphics. Vector graphics — the kind that most printers and graphics programs can do — don't work with Photoshop. Getting Started in Photoshop After you install Photoshop and start it up, you go through several initial steps, including setting up basic preferences, drawing a few lines, and setting up a workspace. The next few sections explain the various settings you can tweak and then give you some helpful hints for using the program. Setting Preferences Whether you're adjusting photos, drawing a simple line, or drawing a complex design, to start, you need to open the Preferences dialog box, shown in Figure 2-1, by clicking the Edit tab and then choosing Preferences. This dialog box helps you to change Photoshop's behavior so it works the way you want it to. Figure 2-1: Click the Edit button in the Preferences dialog box to open this dialog box. Q: How to confirm new items when on first run of widget I am updating the first run information in wootwidget using a gutenberg update. Here is the code snippet that I am using to do this. const getData = (url) => { fetch(url) .then((res) => res.json()) .then((res) => { const { updated_at } = res; ww.set('updated_at', updated_at); }) } I would like to know how can I allow users to confirm updating this first run information? This is important as some info is about the current user. Thanks A: The first run of a widget is part of the initial load of the plugin. To set and save information for an update later, you would need to save the data to a local cache, then use fetch-replace to grab it from the local cache. To save it to a local cache, you can use cache-first to keep it in the widget's LocalStorage, or, if you have a CacheService and need that instead, use the CacheService's set(). More information about localStorage is here: const getData = (url) => { fetch(url) .then((res) => res.json()) .then((res) => { const { updated_at } = res; ww.set('updated_at', updated_at); // save new local cache localStorage.set('updated_at', updated_at) }) } // later in life const getData = (url) => { localStorage.get('updated_at'); fetch

Q: Getting values from two form fields I have two fields: How do I get both values into a string (or some other data) and create an alert with a prompt? A: document.pam.value will retrieve the value of the first element with the name of "pam", and document.pass.value will return the value of the second. So how do you create an alert? Are you asking how to create a javascript prompt? document.getElementById("promptHere").innerHTML = "Are you a..." + document.getElementById("pam").value + " or " + document.getElementById("pass").value; Note: You will want to add on more verification on the server side to make sure that the values are exactly what you expect. A: You can use getElementsByName() to get all input elements with the same name. See # frozen_string_literal: true class Users::Edit
