significantly increased risk of AF and that the additional postoperative salt restriction did not reduce the AF rate significantly. If we analyzed the result on all salt restriction and no salt restriction groups together, we could identify the beneficial effect of salt restriction, as previously reported by two single-center studies \[@CR15], \[@CR16]\]. The mechanism of AF after cardiac surgery has not yet been fully clarified. It is speculated that neurohumoral activation, ischemia, and inflammation due to extracorporeal circulation are related to the development of AF \[@CR34]\]. Elevated serum creatinine levels following CPB increase susceptibility to developing AF after cardiac surgery \[@CR35]\]. Several authors have reported a beneficial effect of postoperative salt restriction in AF after cardiac surgery in patients undergoing CPB-associated cardiac surgery \[@CR15], \[@CR16]\]. One of the possible mechanisms is that the sodium pump might be damaged with CPB, increasing susceptibility to developing AF. Previous studies have reported that the CPB and postoperative use of inotropes increase the risk of AF after cardiac surgery \[@CR36], \[@CR37]\]. It is thought that the tension of the atrial wall is increased by inotropes, which potentially leads to atrial dilation and stretch \[@CR38]\]. The impact of fluid balance on AF was evaluated in two meta-analyses that showed the following; 1) perioperative intravenous fluid overload \[@CR39]\], 2) intraoperative fluid overload \[@CR40]\], and 3) intraoperative intravenous fluid overload \[@CR41]\] increased the risk of AF after cardiac surgery. Unfortunately, we were unable to obtain the data for these variables in this study. Our study has several limitations. First, this study was a single center study. Second, we could not obtain detailed data on comorbidities and risk factors, such as the use of antiarrhythmic drugs and fluid overload. Third, we were unable to obtain data on di
