What's New in the PgcEdit?

PGC (Program Chain) is a term that has been used to describe a specific DVD navigation sequence that has been programmed by the mastering department. Depending on the nature of the authoring job, a PGC can be built from scratch or the DVD author will copy an existing template that is compatible with the hardware of the authoring system. The disc author may create one or several PGCs within a DVD, depending on the number of DVD discs that will be authored. A PGC consists of a predefined combination of a set of PGCs in a defined order and within a specific period of time. Such a piece of information is stored in the database of the authoring system and will be referenced by a header on the disc's PGM. The video player will then rewind to the PGC header, parse the information and play the PGC within the defined time frame. Thus, the terms PGC and PGM are synonymous and one refers to the other. Thus, one can consider a PGM a template that can be modified at will to create a custom navigation sequence. When the disc author is done with the DVD, he or she will create a brand new PGM, which will no longer be tied to the template and will contain a unique navigation sequence. The brand new PGM will then be linked to the recorded data of the DVD and will be added to the disc's database. The brand new PGM will then be referenced by the PGC header. Thus, a PGC header is an information table that links a unique navigation sequence to a specific template. PGC commands: PGC commands are programs that are used to edit the PGC header. The most common PGC commands are TTN commands and EPG commands. TTN commands (Title Tags) TTN commands, also referred to as PGC commands, consist of a set of TTNs and the order in which they will be played. The TTNs are associated with a specific PGC and are separated from each other by a '/' character. Thus, they are stored in the header of the disc as a value in the TTN field of the PGC header. EPG commands (EPG descriptions) The EPG header contains a description of the EPG content within a PGC. Such descriptions are stored as a value in the EPG field of the PGC header. They are separated from each other by a '.' character. When you modify the TTNs within a PGC, these descriptions remain untouched. PGC header: The PGC header consists of a header table and a header description. The header table is a predefined template which is stored in the database of the authoring system and
