Q: UISegmentedControl touchesInView: I'm trying to implement a UISegmentedControl as a UIToolBar item. I followed the example here: UISegmentedControl on iOS 7 There is one item in my toolbar and it's centered. There is a blank space in the center. I added a UILabel as a subview and I added a shadow. It looks like this: It is my understanding that if I add the UISegmentedControl to the view, then I should not be touching the segmented control to get this behavior. Here is my code:

-(void)viewDidLoad { [super viewDidLoad]; // Do any additional setup after loading the view from its nib. UILabel *lab = [[UILabel alloc] initWithFrame:CGRectMake(30, 30, 310, 55)]; lab.text = @"Hello, this is my label"; [self

Create virtual certificates for drivers As a final note, even if Microsoft recently announced that all new hardware drivers will be signed in the future, there's still a chance that you may need to register unsigned drivers for older hardware devices. Therefore, for sake of both security and to avoid problems with your hardware, it's highly advisable to use this useful piece of software to make your changes take effect after a restart.

This driver signing utility allows you to bypass the restriction imposed by Microsoft Corporation and have unsigned drivers loaded and run by Windows. It is also possible to have the process signed by a certificate, a kind of a virtual identity that represents a person or an organization. In that case, the application will verify if the driver is signed by the certificate by calling it. This functionality is possible thanks to the use of Windows drivers that are digitally signed, and can be used as a back door if Windows detects that a Windows-signed driver is missing or is not loaded by the system. Windows and Microsoft Corporation are the owners of the intellectual property rights of all of the
