SpeedTree 2012 Quick Start Guide Odds Of Winning Mega Millions Jackpot This Year According To Experts Malfunctioning road danger signs cause delays at New York's Grand Central It's winter, which means a new season of bike commuting is on the horizon. And if you're among the 1 in 4 New Yorkers who regularly commute by bike, you're about to be mesmerized by the tony scenery of the Central Park Greenway. There's almost as many New Yorkers who don't bike to work as bike commuters, according to a study last year by the State Comptroller's Office. One of the biggest reasons why: Riding a bike to work in Times Square isn't a popular idea. "There are quite a few people who like commuting by bike in New York City, but it's not particularly popular to choose that path," said Robert Ackerman, the transportation expert who wrote the study. “There’s a limited number of places you can get to by bike and many people don’t think it’s safe enough.” Despite the threat of terrible weather, the commute by bike is on the rise: last year, about 50,000 people — or 1 in 4 New Yorkers who commute by bike — used the Central Park Greenway. That’s up from just 2,000 riders in 2010. Whether you’re a city-dweller who loves the amenities of Central Park and loves the idea of biking to work, or a weekend adventurer who wants to explore the north woods, the Central Park Greenway’s a great, affordable route. It’s perfect for people who are new to biking or are already seasoned veteran commuters. And what will you see? “The path passes through some of the densest parts of New York City — Greenwich Village, Chelsea, Hell’s Kitchen, the Meatpacking District — and so you’re going to see some of the most happening sections of the city,” Ackerman said. “But, if you look at the map, you’ll also see the most scenic sections of the city, the rest of the park, and you’ll definitely see a lot of the parks and greenspaces that are so abundant here.” You’ll see a mix of city
