

ray exposure using the method, which are capable of effectively stopping the X-ray tube during the X-ray exposure process. 2. Description of the Related Art In general, X-ray tubes allow a beam of X-rays generated by an electron beam to pass through a target and be applied to a patient and an X-ray diagnostic examination apparatus, e.g., a medical X-ray machine or a CT (computed tomography) apparatus, which uses the X-rays has an X-ray generator (X-ray tube) and an X-ray detector. The X-ray generator includes a body, a cathode disposed inside the body, an anode unit including anode target, and a focus unit. The cathode emits an electron beam, which is accelerated by an electric potential difference between the cathode and the anode. The accelerated electron beam collides with the anode and emits X-rays, which pass through the target and are applied to a patient. The anode target is a target material, such as a beryllium
